Our News

Is ASEAN a growing market for investors?

Businesses are moving their manufacturing hubs here in an effort to diversify their supply chains because of ASEAN's many diverse markets. Due to its connectivity to the rest of the world, strong economic performance, and growing markets, business travellers favour ASEAN. Additionally, it functions as a hub for international trade, and the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP), the largest trade agreement ever signed, gives companies an advantage when exporting their products from the region.

Regional partners such as PLG, provide the local expertise required to manage the local intricacies of individual countries and capitalise on the growth opportunities in ASEAN. Businesses can utilise our comprehensive solutions to maximise regional operational efficiency and cost-effectiveness in their supply chain operations.

Nurturing the next generation of logisticians

Meet Zheng Zhan and Si Wei, our two newest employees, who are here for the duration of their university summer break to gain some experience.

Zheng Zhan is currently pursuing a Major in Mathematics with a Minor in Statistics and is currently attached to the HR department. His attention to detail and patience make him an ideal fit for the department and he is mostly involved with administrative work and the creation of data-driven reports.

“Always have a goal in mind and work towards it. Be it earning money to pay for tuition or earning valuable work experience to value-add to your studies, always plan on how you want to make your part-time job the best for you, and how you want to get there.”

- Zheng Zhan

When asked if he will choose between concentrating on full-time studies or 50% work and 50% study, he says “Working and studying simultaneously can be stressful and demanding, which could be an off-switch to many.

However, if you want to commit to such a schedule, it is important that firstly, you do your research and mentally prepare yourself for the rigour. Secondly, try to make friends in your workplace as they can be your emotional support when you need it.

Lastly, it is important to find time to relax and unwind so that the stress does not accumulate.”

Siwei, who does Procurement, is a Mathematics Major with a Minor in Finance. He is enjoying his time at PLG and mentions that his coworkers are friendly and supportive.

He made the decision to enter the field because he believed that logistics offered a different learning curve and that, given his prior experience (his vocation in the army was logistics), he could adapt to the new environment faster.

When asked if he will prefer full-time studies or a 50/50 work-study balance, he says,

“There is no doubt that something has to be sacrificed to balance studies and work, but if this helps me in my personal development then it is a sacrifice I am willing to make.”

- Si Wei

With the opportunity to learn the business' ins and outs and obtain some work experience, he believes his three-month summer break will be well spent here.

He says, "As a student, we always talk about the 3S theory and the need for trade-offs, because it is impossible to have enough time to do all the 3S activities (sleep, socialising and studying)."

Their choice to work in this industry has demonstrated that students can explore different fields beyond their studies to obtain the necessary experience for a long career ahead of them.

We are glad to be able to provide a learning ground for both of them and we hope to see them succeed in their studies!
